South Carolina Ag Council Offers Ag Tour

The South Carolina Agricultural Council is holding an agricultural tour on Wednesday, October 7. The day-long event will include a tour of Goldleaf Seed Co., Pine Land Co., a subsidiary of Monsanto, Coker Farms National Historic Landmark, and Kalmia Gardens of Coker College. All are located in Hartsville. Participants will begin signing in at 7:45 a.m. at the South Carolina Farm Bureau, located at 724 Knox Abbott Drive, Cayce, SC. The bus will depart at 8:15 a.m. and return to the Farm Bureau building by 5 p.m. Parking for the tour participants will be behind the Farm Bureau Building in the parking lot across the street.

Due to bus seating, the tour will be limited to 47 people, so pre-registration is required. The deadline to register is Friday, October 2. The tour is open to the public until the bus seating is filled, with priority given to Council members and their guests.

Cost of the tour is $30 for members of the SC Agricultural Council and $40 for non-members which includes lunch, beverages, and snacks. To reserve a space on the tour, send your name, phone number along with a check made payable to the South Carolina Agriculture Council and mail to: South Carolina Agriculture Council, PO Box 2683, Columbia, SC 29202.

For more information about the Ag Council tour, please contact Roy Copelan at 803-734-9806 or scbeef@scda.sc.gov or Steve Slice, at 803-806-3843 or Steve.Slice@sc.usda.gov.

South Carolina Farm Bureau offers Classroom Garden Mini Grants

South Carolina Farm Bureau is offering the Classroom Garden Mini Grant program to help school-age children learn about the value and importance of agriculture. The grants have a value of up to $500 and application deadline is October 1.

The guidelines and criteria can be found on the website at www.scfb.org or by contacting Faith Lawrimore at Farm Bureau at 803-936-4287 or flawrimore@scfb.com. The proposals must be submitted on the SCFB Mini Grant Application Form, which can be obtained by contacting Faith Lawrimore.

from Clemson University, but came back to the farm in 1989, the year Hurricane Hugo hit the area.

"When my uncle became terminally ill, my father asked me to rejoin the farm that he and his nephew were then operating," he recalls. "I did and after ten years, I purchased my uncle's half of the farm from my cousin and farmed with my father until his recent death."

Passionate Partners for Farmers

Through previous columns and different announcements, you know that we have a restaurant program that supports our Certified South Carolina program. We have over 200 restaurants now as members of the 'Fresh on the Menu' program, and the numbers are growing. I'll tell you about one of our latest members today, but a column or story could be written about any number of our operators. One thing they have in common is a passion for what they are doing.

Let me tell you about the passion at Passion8 Bistro. On August 19 Blanche and I had the opportunity to attend a 'Farm to Fork' dinner held at Passion8 Bistro in Fort Mill. The owners, Luca and Jessica Annunziata, feel very strongly about eating local so they hosted, cooked, and entertained us to celebrate it. What an evening it was!

Here's a little background on the Passion8 Bistro. The building that houses the restaurant has quite the colorful past. Previously, it housed a brothel and poker palace and when the Annunzias bought it, the City of Fort Mill had labeled it as a condemned building ready to meet the bulldozer. But with eleven months of elbow grease, sweat, and pure determination Passion8 was opened two years ago.

"This is our baby, our dream come true," Jessica said. "We knew it would be the perfect place."

Passionate Partners for Farmers

Both Luca and Jessica had worked in the restaurant business in New York City. Luca was working in the test kitchen for Good Housekeeping and Jessica was a server at a restaurant in the city. Shortly after September 11, 2001 they seized an opportunity to move to Italy where he worked in a renowned restaurant in the southern part of the country. Jessica said after a few years they knew it was time to come home and they settled in South Carolina and opened Passion8.

It's easy to see that the Annunziatas are passionate about what they do. Jessica said they strive to serve more than 25 percent from local sources. In fact, they are growing their own raised garden on their premises. Jessica said right now the garden is not producing much more than some herbs and produce for their "garden pick" special-of-the-day off the menu. Their goal is to provide produce daily for the restaurant. I don't know if you can get more local than your own backyard.

We had a small number on hand for the dinner, only 45 people attended, and some of the guests were the farmers who grew the products used in our meal. They were on hand to introduce themselves as dishes with their products were being served. The dinner featured dishes grown by local farmers specifically for Passion8. One purpose of the dinner was to recognize the growers. I watched the other diners as the farmers spoke about their operations. You could see a genuine interest in learning about their neighbors who had grown their food.

Jessica said they feel it is important to stick with their philosophy of fostering their community by reaching out to local growers.

"Everything that comes from this kitchen is a labor of love," Jessica said. "Our guests know that when they come to dine here they'll get the very best ingredients we can find."

That certainly was the case last month for Blanche and me, as the flavors, the presentation, and the entire evening at Passion8 Bistro made me realize that the 'Fresh on the Menu' program gives the farmers of South Carolina some great passionate partners.

South Carolina Farmer of the Year

He has developed a remarkable farming record. His crops include flue-cured tobacco on 75 acres, corn on 500 acres and soybeans on 1,900 acres. His yields are notable, about 2,675 pounds per acre for flue cured tobacco, 117 bushels per acre over a five-year period for corn, and 35 bushels per acre for soybeans over a three-year period.

DuRant rents almost all of the 2,500 acres he farms. "You can tie up too much capital in owning land," he says. "By renting, my capital can be put to better use. I rent from the same families my dad and uncle rented from, and doing that depends on maintaining the good relationships they built."

How much tobacco he grows depends on his costs and contract prices. Though he's growing tobacco this year, he grew no tobacco in 2008. "Last year, the cost of propane for curing was twice as high as this year, and that would have kept me from making a profit," he explains. "That was the first time in three generations we did not grow tobacco on this farm. This year, I saw an opportunity to make money with tobacco because of the lower propane cost, so I'm growing 75 acres, the least I've ever grown. Our tobacco infrastructure is such that I do not have to grow tobacco."

He's also taking part in a Clemson University study that may lead to a reduction in potassium fertilizer for tobacco. The plots should show if reducing potassium rates harms the yield, curability and leaf quality. "Our goal is to maintain soil nutrients, not deplete them, but we don't want to apply fertilizer if it is not needed, because it is expensive," he adds.

He recently made one major change to his operation when he switched from conventional tillage to strip tillage, and next year he will be using no tillage planting. DuRant takes pride in his environmental stewardship.

"The switch from conventional tillage to strip tillage and no tillage enhances our soil productivity," he said. "Wind and water erosion have been reduced along with fuel consumption and labor costs. The soil is less compacted and supports food and cover year-round for wildlife."

DuRant added his 2010 farm plan includes planting cover crops following tobacco and soybeans that produce low crop residues, plus updating equipment to complement the technology changes, and liquidating unused equipment have been part of this process.

He has also adopted grid-based soil sampling to get more efficient use of nutrients, and hopes to eventually identify separate management zones within each field. He also hopes to invest in auto-steer tractor technology to reduce soil compaction and perhaps reduce the need for subsoiling.

He and his wife Jennifer have four children. Thomas R. DuRant, Jr., 18, a student majoring in agriculture at Clemson University; Joshua, 15; Emily, 10; and Zachary, 4. Both older sons work on the farm and help manage the sporting clay shooting range.

DuRant said he is proud to follow his father in the farming profession. "Farming is more of a calling than a job, and my dad would have been a success in any occupation," he said. "He served other people, and I've tried to do the same. I'm just continuing what he started."

DuRant joins nine other state winners from the Southeast. The overall winner will be announced on Tuesday, October 20 at the Sunbelt Ag Expo farm show in Moultrie, Ga.
